Mr. J. C. Winter killed and brought to lown on last Monday the largest and most venomous looking snake that we have ever seea among the natives of this section. It was a little over five feet six inches long, and about five inches in circumference with a dark, scaly, red back and bright cop-per color beneath. Its head was large and flat, with a neck somewhat smaller than the head or body. It was certainly a very unusual make, and made its appearance of a very unusual season of the year. Mr. Winter found it in a cand bar on his place some fifty yards from the river. A great many persons viewed the dead snake but none of them were able to name it.

The Supreme Court has just decided the case of the State Savings and Insurance Bank of Anderson, S. C., appellants, vs. Marshall B. Gaines, respondent, which in-volved the right of a son of a deceased father to claim a he mestend exemption in the share of such son in the estate against his creditors. The Court dismissed the appeal, and hald that the son can claim homestead exemption against his creditors in lands which he inherits in common with others. We have not seen the decision, and therefore cannot tell whether the exemption only applies where the son is living upon the lands o. not. In the pres-ent case the son was living upon the lands in which he claimed homestead.

We learn that the Atlanta and Charlotte Air Line Railread Company have offered a premium of a silver pitcher for the best field of grass, either clover, timothy, blue grass or herd's grass, along the line of their railroad, grown in any county in South Caro-lina. The field must be in full view of the cars and contain not less than eight acres. Other railroads in the State might follow the good example of the Air Line Railroad with profit, inasmuch as their business would be increased in proportion to the in-crease of the productions of the country through which it passes. A premium of $100 in cash would insure a general and ting both the giver of and the competiors for the prize, it would add to the beauty of
